

DRUGLESS HEALERS MAY NEED LICENSE

HEALTH LAW PROPOSED FOR ILLINOIS INCLUDES ISSUING PERMITS TO THOSE WHO PRACTICE NON-DRUG CURES.

Springfield, Ill., March 10.—Stringent regulations for the licensing of embalmers, midwives and persons practicing drugless healing will be included in amendments to the health laws which will be submitted to the legislature next week. The state board of health has approved the changes.

The most striking amendments are those proposed to govern drugless healing professions. If the amendments are adopted the following regulations will go into effect next July:

The application for a certificate to practice drugless healing must specify what school of healing the applicant desires to adopt. Certificates will be issued on special examinations in osteopathy, chiropractic, mechanical, anesthesiology, hydrotherapy, physiological, therapeutic, etc.

The applicant for any of these branches must have had four years' high school education and a four years' course of study in the particular branch of healing in which the certificate is sought.

Schools of practice in the various branches must meet standards set by the state bureau of registration.

Amendments proposed for the regulation of midwifery will require a preliminary education equivalent to the eighth grade in the public schools and one year's technical training in an approved college.

Amendments to the embalmers' act would require applicants for embalmers' certificates to have a two years' high school education one term of eight in an approved embalming school and one year's practical experience under a licensed undertaker.

Under the present law no preliminary education and practically no technical training is required for certificates to practice drugless healing and there is no attempt to require special education in the branch the applicant expects to follow. Midwives are not required under the present law to have any preliminary education and embalmers at present need no preliminary education and no technical training other than two years' practical experience under a licensed embalmer.

By other amendments which will be presented it is proposed to extend reciprocity of license privileges to physicians who were admitted to practice came bounding into the Springfield police station. "The war must stop," he declared. Springfield—Seventy-five fathers in Springfield have some reason for feeling happy as the Eastern season approaches. Each of the seventy-five have daughters who made their own Easter hats at a cost of $1.50 each. All of the girls are students at the Springfield high school sewing classes. Teachers estimate that they have saved their fathers at least $7 each.

Moline—John Pumpko, who disappeared from the Carbon Cliff jail, isn't causing the police half as much worry as he did when he disappeared from the Argillo works at Carbon Cliff ten days ago. On his first disappearance he took with him ten sticks of dynamite. Police couldn't figure what he was going to do with the dynamite and conducted a frantic search until they found him. He told them where he hid the dynamite and then he escaped from jail again.

Springfield—Two members of Company C, Illinois National Guard, climbed to the top of the 230 foot smoke stack of the capitol power plant here in a heavy gale and attached the antennae of a wireless outfit to be used in teaching wireless to the guardsmen. Spectators held their breath, but the men returned safe.

Peoria—A pitcher of lemonade served on a hot day last summer was responsible for the return of a stolen gold watch to a maid at the home of former Judge W. L. Stemmmons, according to the confession of Joe Zipper, who admits he is the remorseful burglar. After his home was burglarized a few days ago, Judge Stemmmons inserted an ad in a newspaper asking the thief to return the watch because it belonged to the servant girl who valued it very highly. The watch came back in the mail. Zipper, now captured and in jail, admitted he returned the watch and said he did it because when he painted the Judge's house last summer, the girl brought him out a pitcher of lemonade.
